

Mariapia Mendola is Professor of Economics at University of Milano Bicocca, Director of the Poverty and Development Program at Centro Studi Luca d'Agliano (Turin), Research Fellow at the Institute of Labor Economics (Bonn) and the Center for European Studies (Milan). She studies the causes and consequences of migration and asylum seeking around the world, as well the implications of welfare-improving investment behavior in developing countries.

She holds a B.Sc. in Economic and Social Sciences from Bocconi University in Milan. Before graduate studies, she studied at the Pontificia Universidad Católica de Chile and worked at ECLAC in Santiago. Professor Mendola obtained a MA in Development Economics from the University of Sussex (UK) in 2002 and a Ph.D in Economics from the University of Milan in 2005.

She serves as co-Editor of the B.E. Journal of Economic Analysis and Policy as well as consultant and policy advisor for various international organizations such as the World Bank (WB), UNDP, FAO, EC, NRC in different countries in Africa, Latin America and the Western Balkans. Her research has been financially supported by, among others, the WB, 3ie, IGC, the Italian Agency for Development and Cooperation and Fondazione Cariplo.